Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | Northam – Northam Platinum Holdings has opened the door to possible takeover or asset-sale proposals after receiving an unsolicited approach from another major South African platinum group metals producer. The important message at this stage is that: no sale has been agreed, and no changes to jobs or mining operations have been announced.

Northam Platinum Holdings announced on Tuesday, 25 August 2026, that its chief executive and members of management had received what it described as an unsolicited, exploratory and non-binding approach from a major South African platinum group metals (PGM) producer. The unnamed company raised the possibility of either an asset-level transaction or a broader corporate transaction involving Northam. Rather than negotiate only with the company that approached it, Northam's board has decided to launch a competitive process and invite proposals from other credible interested parties as well. The proposals could involve Northam as a company, particular mining assets or other transaction structures. Importantly, Northam has not decided to sell the company or any particular mine. It has also made clear that it may ultimately decide that - remaining independent - offers better value than any proposal received.

Why would other mining companies want Northam?

The approach comes at an interesting time for Northam. Far from presenting itself as a company in difficulty, Northam has recently reported record production, sales and financial performance.

For the year ended 30 June 2026, Northam reported record production of platinum, palladium, rhodium and gold. Chrome concentrate production increased by 17.4%, while total PGM sales exceeded 1.08 million ounces. Northam's operating profit increased drastically, and its audited 2026 annual results are to be released shortly. It explains why Northam may have attracted attention.

South African PGM production is dominated by four major groups — Valterra Platinum, Impala Platinum (Implats), Sibanye-Stillwater and Northam — with Northam currently the smallest of the four.

For communities in the greater Brits and surrounding areas, the future of Eland Mine is particularly important. Eland, situated approximately 12km east of Brits, is one of Northam's three principal South African mining operations, together with Zondereinde and Booysendal. Northam acquired Eland from Glencore in 2017 after the operation had previously been placed on care and maintenance. It has subsequently been rebuilt and progressively ramped up, and it shows that Eland is growing, with production increasing sharply. Perhaps most significantly, Northam reported on 11 August that Eland, while only at about 60% of its planned steady-state production, had delivered its first operating profit.

What happens to Northam's growth plans?

Only two weeks before announcing the strategic process, Northam unveiled its new Vision 2031. The plan aims to increase group PGM sales to more than 1.5 million ounces annually and chrome concentrate production to more than 2 million tonnes over the next five years. Eland forms part of that growth plan. Mining is currently focused on the Kukama and Maroelabult shafts, and Northam specifically stated that it plans to expand production into the Nyala shaft. Northam has also been putting substantial money behind its expansion strategy. A future buyer would therefore not simply be acquiring today's Northam. It would also be acquiring mines and projects with significant planned future production.

What could this mean for workers?

This is probably the most important question for mining communities — and at present there is no announcement of job losses arising from the process.

restructure management or alter the pace of development. Conversely, a transaction could bring additional capital and accelerate projects. Until an actual proposal and prospective buyer are known, it would be premature to predict either outcome.

For now, it's business as usual

Northam has appointed One Capital Advisory to manage the competitive process and will approach parties regarded as credible potential participants. The identity of the mining company that originally approached Northam has not been disclosed. What is known is that Northam has become a significantly larger and stronger producer over the past decade. The strategic process could ultimately reshape one of South Africa's four major PGM producers.

But for the thousands of families and businesses whose livelihoods are connected to Northam and Eland, the next important announcement will not simply be about the price someone is prepared to pay for the company.

It will be about who may ultimately own the mines, what that owner intends to do with them...

and what those plans mean for the people and communities whose livelihoods depend on their continued operation. Taking the current status of the operations into account, the outlook is positive.

Northam Platinum opened the door for offers

There are several possible outcomes. Northam could receive no proposal that its board considers attractive and continue with its current strategy. It could be acquired as a group, individual assets could potentially change hands, or another form of combination with a PGM producer could emerge.

A change in ownership would not automatically result in job losses. Depending on the structure of any eventual transaction, employees and operations could potentially transfer as part of an operating business... or not.

A future owner could eventually change capital plans, combine functions,

Flames and thick smoke rise behind the Doornhoek plots.

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | Thabazimbi – A veld fire that started behind the Thabazimbi cemetery, near Checkers, on Friday afternoon, 21 August 2026, spread rapidly towards Thabazimbi Mall and the mountains.

Thaba Fire & Rescue was alerted at approximately 12:50. Firefighters battled the blaze throughout the afternoon and contained it at around 16:30, after it had reached the traffic circle near the mall. The fire caused extensive damage to electrical infrastructure, including cables, poles and transformer boxes. One transformer reportedly exploded after being severely damaged. Once the area was declared safe, Thabazimbi Local Municipality teams began repairing the affected infrastructure and restoring the electricity supply.

Four nearby thatched roofs continued smouldering after the veld fire. Three escaped further damage, but one reignited at approximately 21:00. The Waterberg District Fire Team extinguished the second blaze, although the roof had already been badly damaged.

The cause of the fire remains unknown.

The community thanked Thaba Fire & Rescue, the Waterberg District Fire Team, municipal personnel and everyone who assisted in containing the blaze and protecting nearby properties. Residents are reminded that the fire ban remains in place. Avoid activities that could ignite or spread fires, especially during the current hot, dry and windy conditions.

HAVE YOUR SAY

Do you believe people can truly change?

People often say, "People never change" – but is that really true? Life experiences, consequences, relationships and personal growth can reshape the way we think and behave. Others believe our fundamental nature stays the same. What do you think: can people truly change?

"I changed through a difficult and deeply uncomfortable mental journey. By honestly reflecting on my actions, feelings and thoughts, I grew – and I can say that I am a better person today than I was yesterday."

Siphiso Mkwenkwe, Regorogile

"Yes, I believe people can change. Positive influences can help someone grow, while life experiences can completely reshape a person. I have seen people change whom I never thought would or could."

COULD SOUTH AFRICA REACH 50°C?... El Niño could bring South Africa a hotter and possibly drier summer in late 2026. Social-media posts claim temperatures may approach 50°C in Limpopo and North West – but official weather forecasters have not confirmed this. El Niño increases the likelihood of heatwaves, but cannot predict exact temperatures months in advance. Although isolated temperatures near 50°C are possible in South Africa's hottest regions, residents should rely on short-term warnings from the South African Weather Service – not viral predictions.

Roosevelt learners march for kindness

Roosevelt Academy's young campaigners proudly raise their voices against bullying during the school's annual march.

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | Thabazimbi – Roosevelt Academy learners took a firm stand against bullying during the school's annual Anti-Bullying March on Friday, 14 August 2026. Learners from Grade 1 to Grade 7 marched from the school in Vanadium Street to the circle at Thabazimbi Mall, accompanied by teachers and members of the Thabazimbi Local Traffic Department.

The school launched its anti-bullying campaign in 2024 as part of its zero-tolerance approach. This year, every learner signed a pledge displayed on a tree-shaped banner, with each named branch symbolising a shared commitment to kindness and respect. Roosevelt Academy has challenged other schools and businesses to support the campaign, reminding the community that keeping children safe is everyone's responsibility.
